June 5, 1962 - Tuesday

Thomas Hughes, Deputy Director of Intelligence and Research in the State Department, came to see me this morning. He is making a survey for the annual National Estimates of the political situation in Germany, [redacted]

Edward Carter arrived, introduced by Secretary of Commerce Hodges. He is President of Broadway-Hale Stores, Los Angeles, California, one of the largest retail chains in the United States. Aside from a keen interest in education, [redacted] as a side issue, he is one of the active members of the Business Ethics Advisory Council, [redacted].

Harold Linder, Chairman of the Export Import Bank, came to see me. He is an old friend; [redacted] I did everything I could on his behalf in getting him his present position, which from all accounts he has filled admirably.

Introduced by Lister Hill, Dr. Hudson Strode, of Tuscaloosa, Alabama, an outstanding author, lecturer, and teacher, came to see me. His biography of Jefferson Davis, of which two of the three volumes have already been published, bids fair to be the definitive work on this subject. He said when he first started his researches, he had preferred Lee to Davis, but now he is an enthusiast of the latter character. I found his reasoning [redacted] interesting.
